THE FORTY ACRE STORY.

BY EDWARD EGGLESTON.

It doesn't do men good to live apart from women and children. I never knew a boys' school in which there was not a tendency to rowdyism, and Immbermen, sailors, fishermen, and other men that live only with men, are proverbially a half-bear sort of people. Frontiersmen soften down when women and children come. But I forget myself--it is my story you want.

Burton and Jones lived in a shanty by themselves. Jones was a married man, and, finding it hard work to support his family in a "down east" village, had emigrated to northern Minnessota, leaving his wife under his father's roof, until he should be able to make a start. He and Burton had pre-empted a town site of three hundred and twenty acres.

There were, perhaps, twenty famifies scattered sparsely over this town site at the time my story begins and ends, for it ends in the same week in which it begins.

The parties had disagreed, quarreled and divided their interests. The land She had a sick husband with frozen was also shared between them, except hands and feet and face to take care of. one valuable forty acre piece. While the father was busy entting wood and the wife was busy otherwise, little Kitty managed to get the shanty door open. There was no latch as yet, and her prying little fingers easily swing it back. A gust of wind almost took her breath away, but she caught sight of the brown grass without, and the new world seemed so big that the

She pushed out through the door, caught her breath again, and started away down the path bordered by sere grass and the dead stock of wild flow-

How often she had longed to escape from restraint and puddle out into the world aloue! So out into the world she went, rejuicing in her liberty, in the blue sky above and the rusty prairie beneath. She would find out where the path went and what was the end of the world. What did she care if her nose was blue and her chubby hands as red as beets ! Now and then she turned her head away from the rude blast, forerunner of the storm, but under the blankets and robes, would having gasped a moment she quickly freeze if he should let the fire subside renewed her march in search of the great unknown.

The mother missed her, but supposed that Jones, who could not get enough of the child's society, had taken the little pet out with him. Jones, poor fellow, supposing that the darling was safe within, chopped away until the awful storm broke upon him, and at last drove him, half smothered by the snow, and half frozen by the cold, into the house. When there was nothing left but retreat he seized an armful of wood and carried it into the house with him to make sure of having enough to keep Kitty and his wife from freezing in the coming awfulness of that night which now settled down upon the stormbeaten and snow-blinded world. It was the beginning of that storm in death, and Jones fled not too soon. When once the wood was stacked by the steve, Jones looked for Kitty. He had uo more than asked for her, when father and mother read in each in the wild, dashing storm of snow.

So fast did the snow fall and so dark was the night that Jones could not see three feet ahead of him. Ho endeavored to follow the path which he thought Kitty might have taken, but it was buried in the snow-drifts, calliug cut to Kitty in his distress, net knowing whither he went. After an hour of despairing wandering and shouting, he came upon a house, and, after having rapped upon the door, he found himself face to face with his wife, he having returned to his ewn door in his bewilderment. When we remember that Jones had not slept for two nights preceding this one on account of his quarrel with Burton, and had new been beating against the Arctic hurricano and tramping through the treacherous billows of snow for an hour, we cannot wender that he fell over his own threshold in a state of complete exhaustion.

As it was, the wife must needs give up the vain search she had been making in the neighborhood of the shanty.

Burton had stayed upon the forty Joues' shanty was not finished, and sion, or meant to play him some treach-

And the child put its fingers on Burten's rough check, and muttered "Papa!" And Burton held her closely, and fought the snow more vigorously than ever.

He found the shanty at last, and rolled the child in a buffalo robe while he made a fire. Then when he had little feet were fain to try to explore it. got the room a little warm, he took the little thing upon his knee, dipped her aching fingers into cold water, and asked her what her name was.

"Kitty," she said. "Kitty," said he; "and what else?" "Kitty," she answered, nor could he find out any more.

"Your Kitty," she said. For she had known her father but that one day, and now she believed that Burton was her father. Burton sat up all night and stuffed wood into his impotent little stove to keep the baby from freezing to death. Never having had anything to do with children, he firmly believed that Kitty, sleeping snugly in the least.

As the storm prevaled with unabated fury the next day, and as he dared neither to take Kitty out ner to leave her alone, he stayed by her all day, and stuffed the stove, and laughed at her droll baby talk, and fed her on biscuit, fried bacon and coffee.

On the morning of the second day, the storm subsided. It was cold, but knowing somebody must be mourning Kitty for dead, he wrapped her in skins and with much difficulty reached the first ueighbor's house, suffering only a frosted nose hy the way.

"The child," said the woman to whose house he had gone, "is Jones'; I seed 'em take her outen the wagor day before vesterday."

Burtou looked a moment at Kitty in perplexity, theu he rolled her up again which so many people were frozen to and started out, "traveling like mad," the woman said, as she watched him.

When he reached Jones's, he found Jones and his wife sitting in utter wretchedness by the fire. They were black calf for that dash." both siek from grief, and unable to move out of the house. Kitty they had given up to be buried under the snow mound. They would find her when spring should come and melt the snew covering off.

When the exhausted Burton came in with his buffale skins, they looked at him in amazement. But he opened it, and let little Kitty out and said:

And Jones got up and took his old partner's hand and said: "Burton, old fellow," and then chocked up and sat down and cried helplessly.

And Burton said: "Jones, old fellow, you may have that forty acro patch. It came near making me the murderer of that little Kitty's father."

"No! you shall have it yourself," eried Jones. "if I have to go to law to make you." And he actually deeded his interest in the forty acres to Burton. But Burton transferred it all to Kitty. This is why this part of Newton was called "Kitty's Forty."

A Greeer's Trick.

The other day a Grand River avenue grocer purchased a thirty-pound erock of hutter of a farmer whom he had never dealt with before, and while down in the cellar emptying the crock, he thought of a trick to surpriso tho agriculturist. Finding a stone weighing about eight pounds, the grocer greased it, carried it up-stairs with the erock, and pointing to it, quietly re-

"This, of course, is to be taken from the gross weight, as well as the jar." The farmer looked at the stone for several long seconds, and then in a voice so low that no one else could hear, replied:

"Please kiver a piece of paper over the jar, for there's a man out by the door who knows me?"

The grocer finally explained his fiendish plet, and the butter-seller's face underwent a sudden change. Reaching over the sugar barrels to shake hands, he said:

"I didn't hardly believe it, though my wife came from a tricky family, and I should have gone home and organized mourning and lamentation in that farm-house. - [Detroit Free Press.

THE Courier-Journal.

For the Centennial Year,

During all the century of our national existence, no one year has perhaps emtwelve munths of the Centennial Anniversary. The year 1876 witnesses in the popular Congressional body the return to power of the great National Democracy, which will be watched with intense in terest in its every movement. The great Centennial Exposition, illustrating and emphasizing every phase of the nation's progress, side by side with the developments of universal civilization, will afford constant fund of incident and information, which, to the great mass of the people, can only be reflected by the newspaper of broad scope and commanding re-sources. The Presidential contract of the year, with the great diversity of interests and opinions, and the anomalous alignment of men, and parties, and sections, will be fought with a skill, energy and weariness only equaled by the moment-ous results depending upon the great
